Old Buck Church.

The James City hick church resembled the old Buck Church. The latter however is a larger building. There was the former. The points in comparison between the two churches are a lower of the western end, facing almost the same point of the compass and a channel dug on the south side near the eastern end of the man. The hick were 1-2 of Buck Church however is laid in so-called Plymouth Pond and its lower has indicated remains of the western corner, head fence at each side and under the same and its extension are broken by offsets at each side.
